A Legend in His Own Time

SSC's Simmons Doesn't Believe in Resting on His Laurels

Karen Anson
 Senior Editor

Lloyd Simmons was a legend in Oklahoma baseball before he returned to the Seminole State College Trojans at nearly 70 years of age.

"I tell my guys that it doesn't matter what Lloyd Simmons did in the past or what the Trojans did in the past," Simmons said last week.

"We will be judged on what we do right now, not on the 26 years previously.

"If I fail or don't accomplish anything, I'll be remembered as a loser, not a legend.

"They'll say I'm too old or lost my touch.

"You're remembered for how you finish up."

Believing that, one might wonder why Simmons agreed to return to the place where he made his mark.

Lloyd Simmons grew up on

“ In the final toll, it's how you treated people and what you did to help other people become successful that's important.”

He doesn't remember the first time he picked up a baseball or bat — he just grew up playing.

"My dad was on the Shaw-

"My dad was a foreman on the Margaret E. Petree Ranch," he said.

"We grew up helping him, everything from driving a tractor to cowboying."

nice semi-pro team during the time that Seminole had the Oilers," Simmons said.

"He taught us how to play."
